Introduction

Hey Ladies,

I'm so glad you made it to this eBook. In what follows, you'll learn 77 secrets to get a commitment from a man. For some of you, this is the first time you've purchased a product from me. I would like to welcome you and want to give you a brief summary of how this special course on commitment works.

In this eBook, you'll learn 77 ways to get a commitment. In addition, as a thank-you for your support, you'll also receive a couple of free bonuses, related to the topic of commitment. (Enjoy!)

All right, let's get started. First of all, let's take a short, one-question quiz to figure out where you are in terms of getting a commitment. This is a multiple-choice question, and I would like you to pick one answer that best describes your situation.

Quiz Question

Which of the following choices best describes your general strategy on getting a commitment from a man?

- ♦ A – No strategy. If he loves me, he should want to commit to me, with or without me asking. In fact, if he needs me to push hard for commitment, it probably means that he is not the one.
- ♦ B – Getting a commitment from a guy means I should do whatever I can to make him happy and satisfy all his needs. I want him to be so happy with me that he will never want to leave. Once he's addicted to me and can't live without me, that's when I'm going to push for commitment.
- ♦ C – I normally try to figure out if the guy is the commitment-type before I date him seriously. During the first few dates, I really ask a lot of questions to make sure he wants a commitment, a serious relationship, or a marriage in the near future. I don't like to waste my time with guys who're not on the same page with me.

So ladies, pick one of the above 3 choices. Now, let's analyze your answer and figure out where you are in terms of getting a commitment.

If You Chose “A”...

If you've chosen A, you're someone who doesn't like to play games. You like to be chased and pursued by a man. You want to be won over. You believe that if he loves you, he will commit without your asking. In fact, you think he should be the one who pushes for commitment.

The challenge you're facing is actually something I myself used to face, which is assuming that men and women think alike. See, for women, once we're in love with someone, we want to commit to him, get married, and spend the rest of our lives with this man. In our mind, love leads to commitment. That's how we think as women.

For men, however, it's a different story. Once they're in love with you, commitment is not the logical next step for them. In fact, men don't see a close connection between falling in love and committing to a woman. In a man's mind, love leads to spending more time together and keeping things exactly as they are.

What you may want to work on is to make a man see things from your perspective. In particular, how to make him realize by himself, that commitment is the natural, logical, next step for him.

If You Chose “B”...

Now, let's talk about choice B. What you're doing right is you're targeting a man's weakness as an animal of habit. Once men enjoy something and have gotten used to it, they don't want to change it. Changing for them means discomfort, risks, and the possibility of ruining a good thing. By making him happy and pleasing him at the beginning, you're making him feel attached.

On the flip side, however, what makes the relationship work for you at the beginning will hinder you later. See, once you've made the guy feel so comfortable and happy with you, he has no reason to move the relationship forward and commit. You've given him everything he's looking for. The relationship is stuck because he has no motivation to work towards something more!

The challenge you have is to keep him wanting more by giving him a bit less. We'll go into the specific steps you can follow to achieve this goal.

If You Chose “C”...

Now, let's talk about choice C. What you're doing right is that you're selective. You don't waste your time and energy on anyone. You know what you want and you will do whatever it takes to get it. You are realistic and understand that you can't change a man. If he's not ready to commit, then you'll respect it and leave him alone.

The challenge you face is that the seriousness of the talk can turn some men off, even if they are the commitment type. What we want to work on is to learn how to select a man for his commitment potential, without killing the fun and exciting buzz that comes with dating someone new. Also, I'll go into some specific clues that will clearly tell you if he is the commitment type without you having to ask.

Before we start discussing the 77 secrets to get a commitment, I want to discuss the general, big-picture strategy behind getting a commitment from a man. I want you to understand this underlying concept well, before you start applying the specific steps. Once you've understood why we do things in a particular way, once you've seen how the little pieces fit into the big picture, you can be more flexible and effective at getting the result you want.

Are you ready? Let's get started!

Chapter 1

Stage 1 – The Big-Picture Concepts

The first big-picture concept you want to understand is that getting a commitment is a multi-step process. This means you can't just make him commit by raising the question five months down the road. Getting a commitment from a man starts from Day One.

It's sort of like making a big-ticket sale for an important client. You can't just spend hours chit-chatting without any purpose, then ask for the sale five hours later. You want to start the whole process with the purpose of getting that sale. The interaction can be long or short, depending on the situation.

In the same way, getting a commitment from a man is a multi-step process. Things you say or do should work towards your final goal of getting a commitment from him.

What if you're not sure if he's the one yet? What if you don't know if he could be your future husband within the first few dates?

These are valid questions. But the reality is it doesn't matter whether you know it or not. You want to be the one who has the option to either make the relationship a long-lasting one or a short-term fun experience.

The power of having those options comes from taking steps to get a commitment. See, you want the guy to be open to the possibility and be willing to go there with you, if you wish.

Doing things to make a man commit from day one will give you more power, more choices, and more control of where the relationship can go. That's how you want to date a man, whether or not you want to marry him.

The big picture is to keep in mind that getting a commitment is a multi-step process.

1 What Commitment Means From A Male Perspective

Commitment from a female perspective is a great thing. It means stability, moving forward, and spending the rest of your life with this great guy. He will be there for you. Commitment is a positive that will make our life better, in most cases.

For a man, however, commitment means responsibility and a promise of some type of compromising. See, when he's a bachelor, it's all about what he likes, what he enjoys, and what makes him happy. Once he's committed to a woman, however, he needs to do a lot more to ensure the woman is happy as well. That means sacrificing some of his own interests at times.

An example will be if you need some help on a particular night when he plans to go out. If he's committed to you, he'll sacrifice a fun night out and help you.

So as you can see, while commitment is a good thing for us women, it's not always a good thing for a guy (especially if he has a thriving career and social life). This is the reason why the vast majority of single men out there -- almost 90% -- aren't really ready to handle a serious relationship!

It's important to see this quirky little side of male psychology in order to fully understand how men feel about dating and relationships. Too many of us disregard the man's take on things, and we end up squabbling over the tiniest differences in opinion.

By the way, you'll probably want to know -- what does this have to do with a man's likelihood to commit?

Here's a funny thing about this "good for us, but not good for him" thing about commitment. Sure, not many of us women know about this. But strangely enough, even most MEN don't know about it, either!

But a few men DO know about it. They're aware that commitment poses a serious, substantial change in their lives. That's why they're more careful (and more caring) when handling a serious relationship.

The more he knows about the "risks" of commitment, the more he's able to deal with them. It's often that simple. So if he's one of the more mature men out there, it's likely because he thinks about the risks and rewards of commitment a lot more than his peers.

Here is a biggie to remember... Commitment is automatically good for you, but only OPTIONALLY good for him.

So when you're about to go into a relationship with a man, don't go thinking that commitment would AUTOMATICALLY be a good thing for the two of you.

Summary – Secret # 1:

Commitment is automatically good for you, but only
OPTIONALLY good for him.

2 Commitment is a Two-Way Street

One thing many women, including the old me, believe is that commitment is really the man's job. If he wants you, he will ask for a commitment.

I think this idea about commitment was popularized in the early 1900's. Back then mass media was taking its baby steps, and "happily-ever-after" stories -- such as the Disney Princess animated movies -- were a big hit. And if you know your Disney movies, you'll know that the Prince Charming always does the dirty work!

Unfortunately, like most movies, they only offered relaxing breaks from reality. They were never meant to SUBSTITUTE reality! And yes, they were never meant to suggest that it's ONLY the man's job to make the relationship work.

Granted, it COULD happen in a few rare cases. (Sometimes we meet amazingly selfless men out there who do all the work for us.) But in most cases, love and commitment are not related in a man's mind. One doesn't necessarily lead to the other. And unless you help him by playing a more active role to get the commitment, he normally won't do it himself.
